

I wanted to let everyone know about a recent incident in Kershaw because it was sort of unique. It's not uncommon for pairs or groups of thieves to use some sort of distraction (measuring rooms, showing you carpet, etc.) while someone else steals items from the house. In this particular incident, the suspects (description below) told the lady that they were trying to survey some property. She told them that she did not own the property and had not requested it to be surveyed.

They insisted that they needed to see the boundary stakes so that they could be sure it was the correct piece of property. She left her back door open while she walked outside to show them where the stakes were located. She believes that during that time a third suspect exited the van, went into her residence and stole a ring and some cash that was in her purse.

Vehicle Description: Gold in color van

Suspects: White Male with a beard, beige hat, white V-neck T-Shirt, and beige shorts, said his last name was Ingram

White Male who said his name was Mark

Third suspect was not seen and possibly had remained in van when others exited

If you have any information, please call us and be suspicious of ANYONE at your door that you do not know.
